

poor live in rural areas. Under these circumstances, we expect the mandated negotiations for the continued liberalization of trade in agriculture to address the particular problems of predominantly agrarian and net-food importing developing countries. The crucial question here is market access free of all forms of TBTs. Equally important also is the dumping of cheap subsidized agricultural products in our countries. My delegation therefore calls on our trading partners, while preserving the existing preferential schemes, to also commit themselves to the reduction of subsidies, elimination of tariff
