

and on the basis of the Memorandum
on the Foreign Trade Regime of Kazakhstan, as well as its observer

96 and meetings of the General Council, and work done within the Kazakhstan's Inter-Agency Commission on the WTO have shown the necessity for a continuation of work on the adaptation of Kazakhstan's trade-related legislation to the multilateral rules and disciplines, and for an intensification of negotiations with

- Training of national experts, organization of seminars and workshops on the multilateral trading system, including dispute settlement, anti-dumping measures, subsidies and countervailing measures, intellectual property rights protection, rules of origin, etc;
- active participation of Kazakhstan's officials in the WTO Special Trade Policy Course.

We also intend to actively use technical assistance provided by other relevant international organizations.

We would like to express our deep gratitude to those WTO Members and international organizations which are providing valuable technical assistance in our accession to the WTO.

Bearing in mind the results of bilateral negotiations and outcome of the second meeting of the WTO Working Party on Kazakhstan's Accession, as well as taking into account the changes in the national legislation and Kazakhstan's offers on market access in goods and services, the Government of Kazakhstan aims at intensifying multilateral and bilateral negotiations, including:

- With the European Union and the United
